The St. Louis Fed's Spring 2011 Economic Education YouTube Video Contest

The U.S. has an independent central bank and so do many other countries. What does this independence mean? You tell us!

The idea is simple: Make an original, insightful and entertaining video of five minutes or less geared toward high school students that explains the concept of central bank independence. Easy, right?

What's in it for you? How do money and fame sound? If your video wins, you will receive a valuable U.S. savings bond. Plus, your economics video, with your name on it, will be posted on our web site and YouTube channel to be seen by millions of students and educators worldwide.

The deadline for entering is April 18.

Go to www.stlouisfed.org/videocontest.cfm for contest rules, forms and other information to help you get started.

Good luck and go for it!
